Haryana's 2018 food-processing policy included a state scheme for backward and forward linkages in rural areas. Its purpose was to connect the processing business with its supply and market infrastructure. The June 2023 state amendment refers expressly to the scheme notified on 12 June 2019.

This is a separate programme history from MoFPI's central Creation of Backward and Forward Linkages scheme. The central scheme's discontinuation date does not, by itself, decide a Haryana state claim.

Identify the state approval being relied on

For an older project, begin with the state application or sanction and the implementing notification cited in it. The June 2023 amendment confirms the scheme's identity but is not a complete statement of eligible components, costs or claim procedure.

Haryana's 29 May 2026 food policy supersedes the 2018 policy. An existing sanctioned project and a new proposed supply chain therefore require different checks of the applicable version and transition instructions. No current state benefit amount should be inferred from an old central rate.

Explain the actual linkage

A useful project description follows the material: who supplies it, where it is collected or handled, what the processor does, and how the finished product reaches its customer. Record the function, capacity and owner of each proposed facility. This helps distinguish a supply-chain investment from an unrelated building or vehicle purchase.

Bring supplier or producer arrangements, customer channels, locations, process details, asset specifications and the financing plan. Itemised costs should identify which component belongs at each stage and whether any other programme has already supported it.

Give a pending claim a clear history

Assemble the approved project scope, sanctioned assistance, expenditure and payments, completion evidence, inspection records and departmental correspondence. If implementation changed, identify what changed and whether approval was obtained. A claim can only be assessed meaningfully against the project that the authority actually sanctioned.
