MoFPI's Creation of Backward and Forward Linkages scheme was discontinued from 1 April 2021. It should therefore be approached as a historical programme when reviewing an earlier project, rather than as a fresh application opportunity.

The scheme sought to close gaps between raw-material supply, food processing and the market. Its published scope included farm-gate primary processing or collection centres and front-end retail infrastructure connected by insulated or refrigerated transport.

Why older project records still matter

A discontinued programme can still have sanctioned projects and administrative work connected to their implementation or claims. The relevant question is what was approved for the individual project and what obligation or payment remains under that approval. A project-status list is not evidence that new proposals are being accepted.

Start with the Ministry's approval letter and the version of the guideline cited in it. Record the components, locations, capacities, grant amount and implementation conditions. Add later amendments to the sanctioned project, where any exist.

Build a claim chronology

The file should distinguish approval, financing, procurement, completion, inspection and release. Keep invoices, payments and asset records linked to the approved component rather than presenting an undifferentiated total project cost.

For a pending issue, identify the last decision or deficiency notice and the response already submitted. This makes the next representation specific: an unresolved document, a scope change, an inspection finding or a release condition can each require different evidence.

Assess a new supply-chain investment separately

A new project needs to be mapped to a presently applicable programme by product, process and infrastructure. CEFPPC, Agro-Processing Cluster infrastructure and the May 2025 Cold Chain route have different objectives and conditions. None should be described as an automatic replacement for this discontinued scheme.
